Fatigue is no longer a matter of self-diagnosis; it can be determined and measured like temperature.

The process is simple, but its application depends on a technique of which only specialists are masters.

If you strike the forearm somewhat forcibly with a sharp instrument a white spot will appear on the surface of the skin. It will quickly dis.4ppear. The time of its fading marks the degree of fatigue reached by your body; the longer the time the less fatigue, and the shorter the time taken by the fading the greater the fatigue.
